

Keep public funds in the classroom

The Problem

Some cities and counties have been requiring public charter schools to follow different rules than ISDs on the size of parking lots and number of parking spaces or forcing schools to spend millions to buy more land than they need. These different rules are often very expensive and divert public charter school money away from children and classrooms where it is needed most.

The Solution

Ensure public charter schools receive the same treatment as ISDs for zoning, fees, land development agreements, and exemptions. Treating public charter schools the same as ISDs will allow them to keep limited funds in the classroom, instead of on lawyers and needless red tape.

HB 3155 will:

- ✓ Exempt public charter schools from impact fees and drainage fees just like ISDs;
- ✓ Require municipalities, by request of a charter school, to enter into a land development agreement, a choice that already exists for ISDs; and
- ✓ Insert traffic impact analyses, parking requirements, and signage requirements to what is included in the term “land development standards.”
